

Winter Mt Toubkal Morocco 2017/18

- Mount Toubkal 4167m is the highest peak in North Africa, and is snowy climb in the winter months, where you get the opportunity to ascend using crampons and an ice axe for security. No previous winter experience is required, as all skills are taught on the trek. The itinerary has been designed for keen walkers, as the ascent is non-technical, but involves some easy scrambling and snow slopes.
- As with all our climbing trips, we focus on skills training and acclimatisation, so before you ascend Toubkal, you summit Ouanoukrim 4089m. From both summits, the views are amazing across the mountains to Marrakech to the north, and the start of the Sahara to the south. All around are the jagged peaks of the High Atlas stretching as far as you can see in every direction.
- This trip enables you to enjoy both the mountains, and the colourful local culture of the Berber villages that are built into the steep valley sides. Your local guide can tell you all about the local culture and traditions, so you get an amazing insight into the region.
- In contrast, Marrakech provides an interesting start and finish, where you can relax and enjoy shopping and eating in the French area boulevards or the narrow alleyways of the medina. For those who enjoy haggling, it's a must to visit the Souk (local market) in the centre of Marrakech, and to try and negotiate a bargain.

Course summary and key details

- Enjoy the local cuisine, couscous, mechoui, pastilla and tajine, as Moroccan food is considered by many to be the best in Africa. In the souk markets, many try and haggle for souvenirs. All meals (breakfast, lunch and dinner) are included on trek. Whilst in Marrakech meals are provided from dinner on the first evening with breakfast the following morning, then dinner on the last night with breakfast on the morning you depart.
- You only normally require warm clothing above 3000m where it is cooler. During the winter the skies are normally clear but as in all mountain areas the weather can be unpredictable.
- UK nationals need a full passport valid for 6 months from the return date of travel. No visa is required for the above passport holders. Most European Community passport holders do not require a visa. All other nationalities should check with their embassy.
- We do stress that no previous mountaineering experience is needed for a Winter ascent of Mount Toubkal, but winter hillwalking (even without crampons) experience will help, as will fairly good hill fitness, as the last couple of days are more demanding.

As featured in the BMC Summit Magazine

One of our guiding team had an article published on the 'experts view' on the mountain. The short article gives a fascinating insight into the history of the first ascents of the mountain, and of the classic ascent route. It is a great example of how Icicle is recognised as a leading operator of trips to this mountain, and of how all our staff and leaders are very knowledgeable about this peak. If you would like to speak to one of our guiding team who has led trips to Mount Toubkal, please get in touch.

Testimonials

"Thank you for a wonderful trip to Morocco, it was excellent. The Riad hosts were just great they looked after me exceptionally well and gave me excellent advice and help on where to go and what to do. Marrakech is just a Magical place, and that is from a person who is not keen on cities. The Trek of Mount Toubkal was a joy, the scenery and local People were delightful and as for the Guide Mohamed the Porters plus the Mule they could not have been better. The summit day was very windy with lots of spindrift, so a hard cold ascent, but the views from the top were sensational" Frank C, Winter Toubkal

Course daily itinerary & objectives

Saturday

Fly from to Marrakech and transfer to hotel. Briefing about the trek.

Sunday

After breakfast, you are driven to the road head at Imlil, and then the objective is to start your acclimatisation by hiking to the high pass of the Col Tizi M'zzik 2660m above the nearby Mezzik Valley, before descending to the valley for the night. Acclimatisation such as this adheres to the well accepted advice of climbing high, and sleeping low. You stay in a gite in one of the old fortified villages such as Ait Souka.

Monday

Enjoy a good breakfast, then set off soon after. Today the trail gains almost 1200m as the trek passes the Muslim shrine of Sidi Chamarouch, and the tomb of the Marabout. From here the path leads upwards to reach the Neltner mountain refuge 3207m. This is the highest hut in the Atlas mountains, and is situated at the foot of Toubkal itself, and you are likely to be based here for the next three nights.

Tuesday

The mountain refuge of Neltner is a perfect base for the final training climb which will acclimatise you perfectly for Toubkal. Today you undertake the day climb of Ouanoukrim 4089m, with its scramble to the summit, which is the second highest peak in the region. You descend to the Neltner, and there is time to rest and relax in the late afternoon. Night in Neltner refuge.

Wednesday

A very early start for the ascent of Mount Toubkal, starting up an easy angled snowy slope. You then head left and traversing the south ridge to reach the summit at 4167m, where you can enjoy the panoramic view which stretches for miles in all directions. The descent is made by retracing your route to the col, and heading back down to the Neltner refuge for the night.

Thursday

Today is potentially a spare day for attempting Toubkal, but generally this isn't required, so after breakfast you leave the refuge and trek down into the Around Valley, via Sidi Chamharouch to reach Imlil for the night.. Night in Imlil (gite).

Friday

After breakfast, you are driven back to Marrakech, arriving around lunchtime, and check in at the group hotel (normally 4 stars) again. There is time in the afternoon for you to have a tour of Marrakech, and the Djemaa el Fna market (souk). In the evening there is a group celebratory meal in Marrakech.

Saturday

Breakfast, then transfer back to Marrakech airport for your return flight home.
